We have rarely, if ever, known new wheat so backward coming in As yet but one or two ots have been offered in the market. We have heard several reasons assigned for the delay, by those who profess to understand the working of such matters. One is that the crop is so very short that the farmers have turned their attention entirely to their other crops, leaving the getting of it out for market to be attended to when an idle time shall arrive; and another is that most of them are unwilling to sell at the present rate of prices, and are holding back in
